THE ASYMPTOTIC SOLUTION OF LINEAR DIFFERENTIAL SYSTEMS

Applications of the Levinson Theorem

The Asymptotic Solution of Linear Differential Systems by Michael Eastham, Volume 4 in the London Mathematical Society Monographs (new series), is now available. The modern asymptotic theory of linear differential systems dates from the Levinson theorem of 1948. This book provides the first coherent account of the extensive developments that there have been on this topic since the work of Harris and Lutz in the mid-Seventies. It describes the main results and techniques now available and provides an extensive treatment of asymptotically diagonal systems, two-term differential equations, equations of self-adjoint type, and advances in resonance and non-resonance.

The published price of the volume is £30.00, 252 pp, hardcovers, ISBN 0 19 853299 7. Members of the London Mathematical Society are reminded that they are entitled to a 25% discount by ordering direct from Oxford University Press. Orders should be directed to Oxford University Press Bookshop, 116 High Street, Oxford.

Alfred Bray Kempe (1849-1922) graduated from Cambridge in 1872 and became a barrister and an authority on ecclesiastical law whose favourite recreations were mathematics and music. In many ways he was Clifford's mathematical successor, and he is remembered today for his work on coloured graphs and a flawed attempt on the four colour theorem that not only stood for ten years but may be seen as foreshadowing the successful, computer-aided proof of our own day. A keen Alpinist, he was elected an FRS in 1881, and was the Society's fifteenth President, from 1892-1894.
